

How can Religious Studies support your future?

We offer Religious Studies to all students as a core subject and also as an option at GCSE.

Students who have studied Religious Studies to GCSE have said...“Religious Studies has helped me to understand different attitudes to lots of the issues that affect people in the world today.” “Choosing this option has helped me to develop my ability to argue a point, even when it’s a view that I don’t agree with.”

The qualification is suitable for all colleges and universities, which recognise the sound training it gives. The Russell Group of top universities have said RS A level provides ‘a suitable preparation for university generally’ because it is a rigorous academic subject. Religious Studies complements other A-Level subjects such as Law, Politics, Philosophy, Sociology, English Literature and History.

Many people who study Religious Studies go on to pursue careers in areas that involve working with people, such as the police force, social work, teaching, health care and legal services.
